New “Career Ready” Program to Aid Military Job Seekers

2017-07-31

DeVryWORKS provides job seeker program and individualized career coaching for veterans

DOWNERS GROVE, Ill.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- DeVryWORKS, the workforce solutions group within DeVry University, is introducing Career Ready, an interactive program to help veterans learn the tools and skill sets that can assist in seeking new employment, advancing within their current career, or simply aiding in their professional development. Career Ready is part of DeVry University’s commitment to support its veterans and military partners through customized learning solutions.

Offered online, the 16-week interactive course is facilitated by DeVry University career services professionals, who conduct live lectures on such topics as:

- Define your personal brand
- Resume essentials and the federal resume process
- Ace the Interview
- Uncovering the Hidden Job Market
- Develop your LinkedIn profile
- Prepare for networking, among others

As part of the Career Ready program, each participant is assigned a career services advisor who provides personalized job leads and coaching, either in person or via web-based tools. Each week alternates between the live lecture series and career coaching, providing eight weeks of instructor-led material and eight weeks of customized advising.

“The job search process can be intimidating, whether you’re seeking your first opportunity or a seasoned professional pursuing a new path,” said Joe Mozden, vice president, DeVryWORKS. “DeVryWORKS is working to assist veterans, and military and government personnel with the career development skills and career advising to get them started whether in government or the private sector.”

The Career Ready program is available in the U.S. and Puerto Rico to government and vocational rehabilitation organizations.
