U.S. Patent & Trademark Office Greenlights Teladoc's Patent Case against Competitor

9/16/2015

LEWISVILLE, Texas--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- This week the U.S. Patent & Trademark Office (PTO) agreed to move forward with Teladoc's (NYSE: TDOC) case to invalidate a patent held by rival American Well Corporation. The PTO's order to proceed with the case, issued September 14, noted that Teladoc has a "likelihood" of prevailing.

"As the pioneer and leader in telehealth, Teladoc has the responsibility to protect consumers' access to health innovations like telehealth," said Jason Gorevic, chief executive officer of Teladoc. "We're proud to stand up for telehealth and can't allow those who would suppress competition to take away access to the benefits of a safe, convenient and affordable health care option. We are pleased that the PTO has acknowledged the strength of our petition and its likelihood of success."

In March 2015, Teladoc requested the PTO review and invalidate a patent held by American Well relating to the practice of telemedicine. Teladoc maintains that American Well's claims of being 'first-to-market' are demonstrably false due to the fact that Teladoc and others were providing telehealth services long before American Well was even formed as a company. In addition, Teladoc has noted in previous filings that "the patents in question are impermissibly broad and cover matters that are too obvious to be patented."

The American Telemedicine Association projects there will be 800,000 telehealth consults in the U.S. in 2015; Teladoc is expected to conduct more than 525,000 of those consults, almost twice the amount of the rest of the industry combined.

A final ruling in the case before the U.S. Patent & Trademark Office is expected in 2016.
