American Airlines to Apply for Additional Service at Tokyo's Haneda Airport

2/21/2019

FORT WORTH, Texas — American Airlines today will submit an application to the U.S. Department of Transportation to operate additional service to Tokyo Haneda (HND) from Dallas/Fort Worth (DFW), Los Angeles (LAX) and Las Vegas (LAS). American's application is a result of the U.S. and Japan reaching a tentative agreement last month to expand access at HND, which would open up to 12 additional daytime slot pairs for U.S. carrier operations.

"Tokyo is an important hub for our Pacific Joint Business with Japan Airlines," said American Airlines President Robert Isom. "Enhanced service at Haneda would give our customers better access to downtown Tokyo and open up JAL's domestic network with flights to destinations like Osaka, Sapporo and Fukuoka."

AMERICAN'S TRANS-PACIFIC
GATEWAYS

American currently operates one daily flight between LAX and HND, which began in 2016. An additional flight from LAX would provide American's customers with even more options and a convenient schedule between Tokyo and the airline's West Coast hub. Additionally, DFW, American's largest hub, serves as an important gateway to Asia with proven local and connecting traffic. With two daily flights, customers traveling from Haneda to DFW would be able to connect to and from more than 800 daily flights and more than 200 destinations throughout American's vast network.

BETTING ON VEGAS

Las Vegas is one of the largest unserved U.S. markets for Japanese travelers. In January, American, together with JAL, operated a special nonstop flight between Tokyo Narita (NRT) and LAS around CES® 2019. Nonstop service was available Jan. 4-14 on American's state-of-the-art Boeing 787-8.

PACIFIC JOINT BUSINESS

American’s proposed Haneda service would be operated as part of the airline’s Pacific Joint Business with JAL. The Pacific Joint Business was established in 2011 and covers travel among 11 countries in Asia and North America. It allows the two airlines to coordinate schedules, network and service to give more than 3.1 million annual customers access to up to 23 daily trans-Pacific flights from 15 gateway cities in Asia and North America.
