A The smallest of the four publicly traded timberland REITs, CatchMark Timber Trust, Inc. (NYSE: CTT) is a pure play timberland REIT focused on highly-productive, well-located timberlands and long-term supply agreements—a strategy that has transformed the company from a little-known REIT into a strong competitor amongst its industry peers.

The Atlanta-based REIT began operations in 2007 and takes its name from the term "catch-mark," the branding symbol at the end of cut logs to ensure easy ownership identification of high-quality timber.

CatchMark concentrates on owning and investing in premium assets in leading mill markets, primarily in the southern United States. It also utilizes fiber supply agreements and delivered wood sales to help maximize cash flows throughout the business cycle.

These characteristics, and the REIT's execution of its strategy, have become increasingly valued by analysts and investors alike. Disciplined underwriting of counterparties and savvy asset management have also contributed to the company's stability during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Brian Davis took over as president and CEO in January 2020, after serving as president since 2019 and CFO since 2013. He says that CatchMark has always believed that acquiring prime timberlands in high-demand mill markets and managing
