Topics to be discussed will include:

- An overview of the mineral resource found in the Cook Islands' EEZ and the role developing these resources can play in contributing to the global supply of critical battery metals.
- OML's progress along the value curve and recent achievements that are helping to de-risk the project, as well as the milestones that will move the project forward in the near to mid-term.
- The technology and tools OML employ to execute its plan effectively and the role OMEX is playing in providing the tools and expertise to facilitate the progress.
- The political and regulatory environment around seabed resource development and the benefits of working within the supportive construct of the Cook Islands' EEZ.

About Moana Minerals Ltd. Moana Minerals Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Ocean Minerals LLC (OML), is a resource development company focused on metals critical to the transition to green energy, responsibly sourced from seafloor polymetallic nodules. The company's world-class team, through close collaboration with its partners and the Cook Islands community and applying best in class due diligence, employs transparent, fact-based decision-making processes. Odyssey Marine Exploration, Inc. currently holds a 13% interest in OML and uses innovative methods and cutting-edge technology to discover, validate, and develop subsea deposits rich in critical metals and minerals that are beneficial to society, including polymetallic nodules containing metals critical to battery production, and phosphate, an important fertilizer component. Its growing project portfolio includes different mineral sets in various economically and politically stable jurisdictions around the world. OMEX is currently focused on Cook Islands polymetallic nodule exploration projects, as well as developing additional projects.
