"Sustainability is a key element of our strategic business planning," said Pierre Brondeau, FMC president, CEO and chairman. "It is also the cornerstone of our R&D technology platforms to ensure our new products create customer and shareholder value while advancing a more sustainable world."

In order to measure FMC's progress, Brondeau announced the company's first set of environmental impact goals, set for 2025. These goals are based on 2013 baseline data and include:

- 15 percent reduction in energy and greenhouse gas intensity;
- 15 percent reduction in waste intensity; and
- 20 percent reduction in water use intensity in water scarce areas.

Additionally, by 2020 the company intends to improve safety performance by reducing its Total Recordable Incident Rate from .51 to .30, raise the Community Engagement Index from 87 to 100 and increase the proportion of total R&D spend on sustainable product innovation from 67 percent to 80 percent.

Brondeau said the company's sustainability initiatives are framed by five major global challenges: food and health expectations, environmental consequences, climate change, scarce resources and land competition. "Employees in our Agricultural Solutions, Health and Nutrition, and Lithium businesses are sensitive to these issues and recognize our collective societal role in addressing them," he said. "We have pledged to advance our business practices in ways that address these challenges and regularly report on our progress."

Brondeau also noted that FMC took a major step in 2015 by becoming a signatory to the United Nations Global Compact. The Compact seeks to raise standards globally in the areas of human rights, labor rights, environmental protection and anti-corruption.
